SIDE II
Arjuna, wanting to know the mystery of complete surrender to God, humbly asks Lord Krishna: O Almighty, who are superior—the worshippers of the Personal God endowed with love, or those of the impersonal Absolute without love?
The Lord says that both the types of worshippers are dear to him. The variety of the impersonal Absolute have to undergo great hardships in the path of God-realization. For their thoughts are not on the manifested, but those who adore him renounce all actions in him, regard him supreme, reflect upon him with unflinching devotion. He delivers them from the ocean of birth and death.
The Lord therefore asks Arjuna to fix his mind exclusively on him. If he is unable to do so, he should steadily on him, then he should reach God-realization by the practice of concentration. If he should be unable to take to concentration, then he should be intent on performing action for his sake, leaving the fruits of all actions to him. The best way to reach him is to take refuge in his disciplined activity with a subdued mind, and to perform duty in a spirit of consecration to God. He shall attain perfection.
